“ Aunt Joyce is a strange name for me to use to talk about her. She was only 3 years older than I and we were more sisters or friends than aunt and niece. I remember more than anything else the times when the family lived in the old 2 story building just as you enter Greenfield. We played "Old Witch" with David who was a couple of years younger than I and all the other siblings. We both hated to be told we were "an old dirty dishrag" in this game. Aunt Ruby and Aunt Lois played with us too although were much older. The last time I saw her this past summer, she quickly reminded me that I was not to use her middle name, or if I did, not to say it loud enough for anyone else to hear. I always loved it because Grandpa Allen loved it and he could sing! "Sweet Adeline." I was a little bit jealous that she had a song for her name and I did not.

Another good memory is her love for Carla. When I visited in Bluffs, she and Carla would take care of making me feel welcome even though Carla often called out, "Mom, one of your sisters is here." See, I told you she was more like a sister.
